For twenty-five years, Patrick pursued his passion for IT in the IT departments of major groups. He also tried his hand at entrepreneurship, allowing him to develop flexible and agile organisations.

A graduate of Centrale Paris, Patrick began his career at IBM as a technical salesman and then joined the IT department of Euler-Hermes. Five years later, he joined the Bouygues group where he worked successively for 9 Telecom, Bouygues Construction, Bouygues Immobilier and Bouygues télécom, where he was in charge of corporate security.

In 2012, he created a startup and developed applications using instant messaging. He won the first Hackathon on Health.

He then returned to his CIO role and worked with large groups such as Engie on their IT developments as a transition manager.

Within AXCEL Partners he is in charge of the Digital, IT and CyberSecurity practices.
